How is Resurrection Lutheran like the Atlanta International Airport?

Our home church should operate much like an airport -- it is a hub through which people come and go. Rarely a destination in itself, travelers access the hub to get their tickets, check their bags, grab nourishment for the trip, obtain flight information, find the terminal and gate taking them to and from their flight, then on to their destination. Our church should operate in a similar fashion. The church building should be a place where Christ's ambassadors get spiritually nourished and equipped for work in the mission field. It provides fellowship, support, and learning to enable members to effectively reach out to the community and to those in need. The church is a jumping off point to enter the world ready to build God's kingdom and share His message of restorative love to all.

Think about it:

Are you seeing church as a destination, or an important connection to get to where God is sending you?
